Cookies are files that contain small amounts of information that are downloaded to the device you are using when you visit a website. Cookies are then sent back to the original website at each subsequent visit or to another site, that recognizes that cookie. Cookies do many different useful things, such as remembering your preferences and generally improving your online experience.

■ Session cookies

Session cookies only last for the duration of your visit and are deleted when you close your browser. They facilitate tasks such as allowing a website to identify that a user of a particular device is navigating from one page to another, providing site security or basic functionality.

Many of the cookies we use are session cookies. For example, they help us ensure the security of your Internet Banking session and we can also keep you connected to Internet Banking as you navigate between pages or manage your account.

Security session cookies are designed to be very difficult to read, modify, access, or use, unless we have an active Internet Banking session. They do not contain personal information that can be used to identify an individual. Their names usually start with the letters IB, for example. IBSESSION, IBCOOKIE01, IBCOOKIE02.

■ Persistent cookies (repeated)

Persistent cookies occur after you close your browser and allow a website to remember your actions and preferences. Sometimes, persistent cookies are used by websites to show advertising based on the browsing history of the device.

For more details about our cookies we have created a list of the cookies we use:
